Cubism, highly influential visual arts style of the 20th century that was created principally by the artists Pablo Picasso and Georges Braque in Paris between 1907 and 1914. The Cubist style emphasized the flat, two-dimensional surface of the picture plane, rejecting the traditional techniques of perspective, foreshortening, modeling, and chiaroscuro and refuting time-honoured theories that art should imitate nature.

Cubist painters were not bound to copying form, texture, colour, and space.

Instead, they presented a new reality in paintings that depicted radically fragmented objects.

Cubism derived its name from remarks that were made by the critic Louis Vauxcelles, who derisively described Braque's 1908 work Houses at L'Estaque as being composed of cubes.

In Braque's painting, the volumes of the houses, the cylindrical forms of the trees, and the tan-and-green colour scheme are reminiscent of Paul Cézanne's landscapes, which deeply inspired the Cubists in their first stage of development .

It was, however, Les Femmes d'Alger, painted by Picasso in 1907, that presaged the new style; in this work, the forms of five female nudes become fractured, angular shapes.

As in Cézanne's art, perspective is rendered through colour, with the warm reddish-browns advancing and the cool blues receding.
